The Daily Press.

HONGKONG, JUNE 19, 1866.

SOME weeks had elapsed since any striking case of piracy had been reported, and the attack on the schooner Carl which was described in our shipping news of yesterday seems almost a novelty. It is a striking illustration of the way in which the pirates of China, had contrived to establish their position, that looking back it really seems remarkable that two consecutive mails should have gone out without any fresh stories of murder and robbery at sea. It seems that we were not destined to be long left to this unaccustomed tranquillity. The Carl has added her name to the longroll of victims, her unfortunate Captain has been murdered, her cargo plundered, the savages who attacked her have vanished and the wounded ship comes back to excite a momentary feeling of indignation as usual and then possibly to be forgotten. Assuming that all possible efforts are now being made by the government to obtain an understanding with the Chinese authorities which shall enable them to operate more effectively than hitherto against the predatory junks, still there is one circumstance connected with the attack on the Carl which calls for particular notice. Of course those negotiations to which we alluded could not, however they were carried on, lead to the immediate cessation of piracy. On the contrary we may presume that the pirates, if they became possessed with the idea that measures of extraordinary vigor were about to be undertaken, would display an extra amount of enthusiasm during the last days or weeks of what they would regard as the good old times, would as it were, make hay while the sun shines, with all the greater industry for the dread of a coming storm. We should not for some time conclude that the government was neglecting any opportunity of action because cases of piracy continued, for some months to come, tolerably frequent, but there is as we have said, one circumstance connected with the attack on this Danish schooner which gives rise to painful surprise. The chief mate appears to be quite sure that the junk which attacked his vessel, was one of four which left Hongkong harbour in his own wake. The pirates that is to say, in accordance with a practice they have long been known to have adopted, lay watching their intended prey in the waters of this colony, fitted themselves for sea by the facilities afforded in our own port, bought their powder, guns and stink pots at China shops in this town most probably, and then weighed, in the sight of all men when they judged it expedient, sailed out and attacked the vessel they had selected. It is a miserable and humiliating reflection that this is possible and all the more so from the fact that the power of preventing it is altogether in English hands. At present as for months past,—for years past indeed, but we said for months past because during the present year attention has been more particularly called to the matter,—at present then, as heretofore, there is a fleet of pirate junks lying in this harbour. They come and they go, and they take in what stores they want and no one asks them a question. Now, as at the begining of the year you may take a boat at the stairs below our office, and in the course of an hour's pull amongst the native craft, pick out a dozen at least, armed to the teeth with big guns ready for any tempting enterprise which the course of maritime business may offer. In the face of such harbour regulations as ours what can we say to the Chinese government?

FOR the last fortnight we have all been considerably amused by the article in the Times which explained the mortality at Hongkong, and gave an account, evidently the work of someone who knew the place well, of the sufferings incidental to residence in this colony. From the article to which we refer, it appeared that the chief cause of the unhealthiness of this town was the baneful shade of the hill. During the summer there was not enough sun in Victoria. It went down behind the Peak at a very early hour in the afternoon and was no sooner out of sight then a pestilential mist began to rise in the valley from which all who were rich enough fled immediately, driving round to the sunny side of the island to spend the evening and night. No doubt the writer of the interesting account in question had taken to heart the theory about the reversal of all European customs in China, and concluded that with us the sun must set in the south, and acquire refreshing and agreable attributes when it reached the zenith. Innocents as are most accounts of China which are published in London, this achievement of the Times certainly stands forward conspicuously as the most ridiculous nonsense on the subject of the Chinese climate which has ever been produced. That a certain amount of falsehood should become mixed up with the literature, current or otherwise, relating to a distant place is not to be avoided. With the best intentions people make mistakes, everybody cannot be an original authority, so that a great number of people who write in English newspapers about remote lands have to accept second hand information, and of course in passing through the middle brain the facts are distorted, as rays of light passing through many glasses, would at the last altogether lose their resemblance to the object from which they were reflected. Without presupposing that any one man who might form a link in a long chain of persons, would tell lies with malice prepense, it is possible to suppose that when a narrative has to pass through many hands it should become mutilated and perverted to almost any extent, but it is difficult to imagine that the truth could be reduced to the state of that article in the Times, by any ordinary process used in the conveyance of information. It is to be presumed that a man having to write an article about Hongkong for the Times and to give a through and satisfactory explanation of local circumstances in explanation of given phenomena, would not draw upon his imagination or trust to mere hearsay. China, it is true, is a distant place from the Londoner's point of view, but it has not been altogether unvisited during the last dozen or so of years, and there are people in Great Britain, easily accessible one would say to a writer in the Times, who would gladly give information concerning Hongkong, and whose accounts would be as accurate as those which might be given by any of us here now. Assuming, even, that the writer was called upon very suddenly and had only time to consult friends who had friends in this colony, or dictionaries of geographical facts, or bygone news paper correspondence from here, still it remains unaccountable how he could have gone so far astray.

The worst of it is, that in thus going astray he has done very considerable harm. To enormous numbers of people of whom very many have friends here, statements with the Hall Mark of the Times upon them will be taken as gospel truth when the matter to which they relate is little understood. A great many kind hearted persons with relatives in this colony, will have suffered acute pain through that wretched, heedless nonsense which has been so carelessly given to the world. Hongkong residents in general must be very little given to writing home what are called "graphic" letters, or it would be impossible for people to know so little about this place. It does indeed become difficult after long residence here, after the climate and the people, the habits of life, the changing seasons all become utterly familiar and common place, to give by letter an account of scenes and weather and the routine of existence to persons in another latitude and another hemisphere who have never obtained more than a misty and uncertain conception of this colony and the manners of the colonists. It is all, but impossible to avoid the impression that such and such things, which are things of course to the writer, may be things entirely strange and undreamed of to the reader of homeward letters. You fancy that you must have said all about that,—whatever it may be,—ages since, though the chances are it has never been mentioned. It would be curious, for instance, for people who think they have given friends in England a pretty fair description of Hongkong to see whether or no they have ever said if the island generally, looking at it as a whole, be brown, red, yellow, or green. It will weaken the confidence we all have of course in our own powers of description, to find that a correspondent is under the impression that the island generally is granite color, a slaty grey with patches of sand and the sun heating it red hot, but it would be a healthy discipline, teaching care in the details of our epistolary pictures. It is true that there is one difficulty in the way of teaching people in England to understand China; people in China care so very little as a rule whether they understand it or not. An indifference to things in general, a desire to make money and go home at the earliest possible period, and efforts to fill up so far as possible all time not occupied by business, with pleasure,—pleasure of the poorer sort, "pastime" literally, that which will "kill the enemy,"—are perhaps amongst the characteristics of Hongkong young men, and Hongkong elderly men have left off writing home to their friends. Stumbling on this difficulty, indeed, it becomes quite impossible to say more on the subject. If nobody cares whether or no English people understand Hongkong, they will not take the trouble to write minute descriptions, but if people do desire it there is no other way.

To the Editor of the "Daily Press."

SIR,—I perceive by the Evening Mail of Saturday, that an officer of H.M. Naval Service, protests against one paragraph of the Police Report of that paper, involving the appearance of one of H. M. officers before the Police Court. Will you allow me to take a leaf out of his book, and in the name of the American community here, protest against you or the numerous readers of your paper, supposing for a moment that the Mr. Moses, who figures in your Police Report of today, is Mr. C. Lee Moses the gallant and high-minded gentleman who so ably fills the United States Consulate at Brunei, although the attending circumstances might naturally lead one into that error. We, Americans feel deeply on this point. We have so few of the heroes of the late rebellion amongst us, that we have natural repugnance to seeing any stigma, even of a slight nature attach itself to one who so distinguished himself throughout the war on board the frigate North Carolina, and whose daring gallantry during the whole course of that noble ship's operations against Kobbdock on the Brooklyn side of the river, thrilled the heart of the nation with admiration and awe. In fact the equipment of the Negro Regiments by the U. S. Government is generally attributed to the striking force of his glorious example. The President being satisfied by this experiment that the African race when well armed and well led, are as capable of heroic deeds as the Anglo-Saxon. Nor were the citizens of Massachusetts, (his adopted state) behind in affording substantial proofs of their appreciation of his manly vigor. The freedom of the city of Bull was voted him at a special meeting of the Mayor and Aldermen convened for that purpose; a tract of land was voted him at Mt. Auburn; and the "Brighton Artillery," the most ancient and honorable military corps in the state who date their organization back to the 2nd Charles, elected him an honorary member, and placed one of their well-furnished private carriages at his disposal during his sojourn in, or future visits to the Capital.

It is greatly to be regretted that the shrinking, modest nature of this truly great man prevents him from honoring our colony with his presence occasionally, but I am informed that on his last visit here, the Representative of Her Majesty's civil authority in this colony despatched his Aid-de-camp to the Hotel in Taipingshan, where this gentleman was located, with a pressing invitation from Her Majesty to become her guest for an unlimited period, and to take up his residence in one of the Government offices, placed at his disposal, but evading this pressing invitation with the modesty inherent in great minds, he departed for Macao the same evening by fast-boat, to avoid further importunity, preferring that uncomfortable conveyance to waiting for the next mail's steamer. I have heard very many expressions of regret from parties here at this sudden departure.

AMERICUS VESPUCCIUS.

A French savant has recently been endeavouring to show that opium could be profitably cultivated in France. From an actual experiment he found that if only five farmers devoted themselves to the cultivation of the poppy plant, they could supply as much opium as is now annually consumed in France. In connection with the subject of opium there seems some reason for believing it to be an antidote for arnica. Twenty drops of opium were administered in an ounce of brandy to a man who had swallowed some arnica in mistake, and the result was a profoundest slumber, resulting in the recovery of the patient.

The Inquest on Mrs Meyers.

The inquest on the bodies of Mrs. Meyers and her child, who were murdered on board the hulk Richard, off the Sailor's Home, was resumed yesterday after being adjourned from Saturday. The man supposed to be the murderer, Wong-kwai-Fook was arrested the evening before last at his native village Toi-poong and is now in custody.

Mr. Meyers, husband of the deceased deposed that the boy came on board on the night of the 14th, and as he had known him for two years, he could not possibly be mistaken about his identity. By a Juror. Did you ever recognise any pock marks upon the prisoner? Answer, I never did? Did you ever see him on board before? I never did to my knowledge, but he might have been there often without my having any knowledge of it. The prisoner was asked if he wished to ask Mr. Meyers any question. He did not wish to ask a question. Dr. Murray, Colonial Surgeon was in attendance, as he was on Saturday, but he had no fresh evidence to added. There was, however one matter which attracted the attention of the court, this was that the prisoner when apprehended had a white jacket upon him which had several marks of blood on it, but these marks had been partially obliterated.

The comprador in attendance upon the ship, Hong Ho Fook was next called, and deposed that he had been on board on the morning in question as well as on the night of the 14th, and also as well on the 13th. He saw the prisoner on the thirteenth instant. He was a friend of the two boatmen belonging to the hulk and he did not leave the ship to his knowledge until after the morning of the fourteenth, for upon his return from market upon the morning of the fourteenth he saw him, but soon after he went on shore and returned about 6 P.M. He then had a grass cloth jacket on which the witness recognised.

He also had a black silk trowsers on as well as a second white jacket which was very like one produced in the court. The prisoner slept on board that night. The witness also slept on board as well as the two boatmen, but though he was always in the habit of living on board he did not miss with the boatmen. On the morning of the murder he did not leave the ship until six o'clock when he called his boat (which he hires by the month) but this morning he went ashore in a sampan. His boat (a sampan) was moored astern of the hulk and the Comprador slept on board of her. The witness only sometimes sleeps on board of his sampan as the only inhabitants of it, (or they live there night and day) are two women and and two children. He returned from market about seven o'clock according to his invariable custom to shew the various proceeds of his marketing when he saw his poor mistress lying upon the floor of the cabin but so covered with blood that there could be no doubt about it that a murder had been committed.

Mr. Swan was called into court but simply for recognition by the compradore. He had gone on board with the compradore, apparently from the general evidence of the compradore, although not expressly stated in his evidence in order to exonerate him from any suspicion of complicity in the frightful tragedy. At the suggestion of a Juror the compradore was asked how long he had been in the service of Mr. Meyers. His answer was seven months. Of the two boatmen one had been engaged one month and the other two.

By the foreman of the Jury. When the compradore came out of his boat did you see the deceased. Answer. I did.

The foreman of the Jury again. Did you know where your mistress kept her money. Answer no I never did, she always took her money from her pocket in the dining room, and I do not remember ever to have seen the boatman loitering about that part of the ship, which especially was appropriated to the family of the deceased.

I never heard them talk anything about money matters. The case was again adjourned until three o'clock, but before the adjournment P. Sergeant Andrew, No. 3, deposed that on Friday morning about half-past three he went in company with Mr. Inspector Roach to a hulk lying a short distance from the shore and that opposite to the Sailors' Home. . . . I went to the 2nd cabin where I found a chest of drawers all open and many articles of clothing scattered about the floor.

Upon entering the bed-room I found the beds in great disarrangement, the curtains were much in disorder and the floor was all covered with blood, there was also a quantity of clothing scattered about and the dead body of a female adult lying in her bed and quite cold. There was a large wound in the neck and close by there was a large cot containing a child about 3 years old. I found in the bed room a large knife (produced in court) of which I took charge and take leave to present it to the Court. There was a jacket found upon the floor which was very much covered with blood.

The Sergeant further observed that upon searching the prisoner he had found a $10 note and one or five dollars.

The inquest was again adjourned until half past three o'clock P.M.

Mr. William Swan was sworn and said. I am a boiler maker residing at West Point, and in basin as for myself. I was on the premises of Messrs Logan & Co. adjoining my own when I was purchasing something from the last witness but one whom I did not know, when the compradore of Mr. Meyers came up and said something in the Chinese language which I could not understand but which induced me to take my boat and (accompanied by the witness to whom I have referred) I proceeded to the hulk which is Mr. Meyers' residence. As soon as I got along side I went into Mr. Meyers' cabin where I saw his wife lying covered with blood upon the cabin floor. I did not see the child at first, I was too much agitated to notice it, but I soon found that there was another corpse in the room beside the one on the floor of the cabin. This was the body of a child about three years old lying upon its face. I felt the pulse of Mrs. Meyers which was not quite cold nor was that of the child.

Inquest adjourned.

Native Banks in Foochow.

We hear that there has been within the last few days a slight monetary crisis amongst the Chinese here. Two apparently well-to-do banks in the suburbs called the E-chang and Che-chang banks have suspended payment, and thus caused the ruin of a pawnbroker's establishment and other small shops, all more or less dependent on the latter of the two.

The E-chang bank was ransacked by a gang of thieves from top to bottom the instant it was known that it had broken, and every portable article even to the doors and windows carried off before the authorities could arrive on the scene of action. Six of the offenders were caught, sentenced to decapitation, and only pardoned at the last moment by a reprieve from the Tootai. The other establishments were however officially closed with the seal of the Hoifang, and a notification issued, informing the creditors of the fact, and also that the assets would be sufficient to cover all liabilities, which, in the case of the Che-chang bank alone, it is said amount to over Tls. 100,000. Those failures happen every year, and must be attributed in the present instance to an extraordinary run on the banks consequent on the near approach of the feast of dragon boats at the commencement of the 5th Chinese moon, when tradesmen's accounts are for the most part cleared off, and, it being currently reported that a foreign hong holds drafts issued by one of the insolvent banks, we would warn the public to be chary of having much to do with Chinese notes now; at the beginning of the 8th moon; and at China new year time, three usual times of settlement of all outstanding debts throughout the year.—Foochow Advertiser.

PARISIAN CHAFF.—In Paris the mesalliances of the noble faubourg are at present the subject of various witticisms. The young Duc de Brissac is marrying a fortune made out of sugar, on the strength of which his less successful compeers congratulate him on getting the most refined young person in Paris for a wife. The Marquis de la Rochejaquelien marries a dowry which comes from a shawl manufactory, and the noble bridegroom is congratulated on the probable splendour of the corbeille, which will contain, it is supposed, French cashmeres de reconnaissance rigoureuse. The young lady who accompanies this dowry is a Mdlle. Dubois, and the marquis finds it convenient to triaphabise that plebeian appellation, following in addition an English example by writing it with a y. A certain Vicomte Gouy d'Arcy is about to espouse a dowry made in mussary, with a bride whose name has hitherto been Atelle. The honeymoon, the wits suggest, will surely be perpetual with such a wife; but there is held to be something unnatural in the fact that the lady a possessed of a taille de guêpe.

THE WIT OF A WORKMAN MEETING.—Mr. MECHEN, a working man, in seconding, gave a humorous sketch of the career of Mr. Lowe, who he said had been picked up by the Marquis of Lansdowne and put into his pocket.—Daily Telegraph

The alterations being all completed, the Naval and Military Club have opened their new abode, Cambridge-house, Piccadilly (Lord Palmerston's town residence), for the reception of members.

CRIMINAL SESSIONS.

BEFORE THE HON. HENRY J. BALL, ESQ.

Acting Chief Justice.

Jury—Joaquim Pereira de Campos.
John Jack.
John Shinsan.
Alexander Bielfeld.
Robert Hodge.
Conrad Hochstetter.
Edward Baker.

Reg. v. Wong A Saw, Escape.—The Hon. Julian Pauncefote, Esq., Acting Attorney General appeared for the Prosecution. Prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Henry Manning, sworn. I am Turnkey of Victoria Gaol. I have been so three years and nine months. I know the prisoner. I have seen him before as a prisoner in Victoria Gaol. He was there when I was appointed.

In answer to the prisoner—I recognise you by the marks on your face and a mole on your left shoulder—I remember the mark on your shoulder since the time you were examined after your last sentence. The prisoner is now—5 feet 5 inches in height, when he first came to gaol he was 5 feet 4 inches.

In answer to the Court. He remained in gaol six months after I was appointed—he was not present when called on the 5th March 1863, I have not seen him since, until he was brought to gaol last month.

Francis Douglas, sworn. I am Superintendent of the gaol, I produce a book which was kept for the purpose of recording the marks found on prisoners.

The record of the prisoner's former sentence was produced and read by the Acting Registrar.

Andrew Johnson, sworn.—I am Turnkey at the Convict Hulk. I was Turnkey at the gaol for five years. I know the prisoner I knew him in gaol. He escaped on the 5th March, 1863 I never saw the prisoner since that before the 5th March, the prisoner was under my care I know him by the marks on his face and a mark on his left shoulder. he escaped from the gaol with other prisoners. When I was a first appointed the prisoner was undergoing punishment for 15 years penal servitude, he sometimes went out breaking stones.

Prisoner asked second witness how he could identify him. Witness replied that he knew prisoner by certain marks

His Lordship remarked that the prisoner could only be indicted for a misdemeanor.

The prisoners had nothing to say in defence and the jury returned a unanimous verdict of "guilty." Sentence deferred.

Reg. v. Tang Ahing, Larceny in a dwelling house being armed.

Thomas Lin Tuck, sworn, I am Interpreter at the Harbour Master's Office. I live in Queen's Road West. I remember Sunday morning the 10th instant about 2 A.M. I was in my house I tried to escape a fire which was three houses from when I was living. I and my family went out of the house. I returned to get some property and saw the prisoner in my house. He was alone up stairs. I asked him what he was doing, he said he was trying to get down some of the property, he had a knife in his hand and attempted to stab me. I ran down stairs and got a policeman, about 5 minutes elapsed between the time I left the house and returned with the Policeman. when I returned I found the prisoner at the door of my bedroom he had a jacket under his arm, (jacket produced.)

That is my jacket, the prisoner tried to escape, I gave him into custody. I examined the room, one of my chests had been broken open and a great many things were gone,—jackets, sheets, and other wearing apparel. I saw the things ten days before, I lost $11 and articles of clothing to the value of about $100, I heard the prisoner say to same man in the street "Brothers come up." I did not see prisoner do anything to my house.

In answer to prisoner.—No other family lives in my house with me. A policeman did not search me, prisoner did not say he had come as a friend to assist and save property.

His Lordship remarked that the statements made by the witness at the Police Court did not agree with the evidence given at the Supreme Court.

In reply to the Court the witness stated that the prisoner might have run away if he had chosen to do so before the police constable came.

Bus Mahomed P.C. 401, declared, I took prisoner into custody about ten days ago, the first witness gave him into custody. I saw the first witness in the street close to the door step, I saw the prisoner standing at the top of the stairs, he had a jacket under his arm.

I searched him and found a dagger (dagger produced.)

To the Court.—The other witness did not go into the room. I searched the prisoner. I did not hear the prisoner call, he was standing quietly, he wore a dagger in the usual place near the waist. I do not think there was time for him to escape after the first witness called me. In answer to the prisoner. I do not know whether you could have escaped by a back way if you had chosen to do so. I have not looked at the house to see if there is a back entrance.

His Lodship remarked that the 1st witness had given his evidence in English, but if it were to be taken as a specimen of the evidence generally given by the Chinese, it was a fearful one, and he thought the jury would scarcely believe that the evidence given at the Police Court and the statements made before him to-day, were made by the same person. He would read the evidence given at both Courts, and trust the jury would give it their full consideration. The jury after a long consultation returned a verdict of guilty by a majority of 6 to 1.

His Lordship said that as the evidence was given in a most satisfactory manner he would use his discretion and only sentence the prisoner to 18 months imprisonment with hard labour.

The Lesson of the Nottingham Election

The revelations made before the Nottingham Committee will not, we trust, be lost upon the country. The verdict has not been pronounced, and there are some witnesses yet to be heard, but the lesson to be learnt from the evidence is already clear. Extracts.

Thomas Carlyle.

Run over the articles of Mr. Carlyle's creed as he tells it in his Edinburgh address,—his hatred of all speech that does not subserve directly on action,—his curious admiration for Goethe's doctrine of symbolic education by mute gesture (not, we suspect, because they are necessarily more sincere, witness Oriental gestures, which are full of flattery, and even diffuse insincerity, but because they express thought and feeling on large subjects much more vaguely, and harmonize better therefore with Mr. Carlyle's own vague thought on infinite subjects),—his belief in courage—the Roman virtus, as almost the sum and substance of all human goodness,—his reverence for all instinctive and hereditary qualities, hereditary descent being a mode of transmission in some sense not merely supernatural and natural,—his value for physical health and the transmissibility of spirit which it gives, and his half poetical gratitude towards that regenerating sleep which soothes down the nervous excitability of genius,—his preference for the Roman type of character, with its religion of imperial duty, and his remarkable selection for special panegyric of Phocion amongst the Greeks, who represents the nearest to the Roman type among eminent Greek politicians,—finally, as the central point of all his creed, his devotion to all historic characters which bring organizing power to bear upon personal focus, and present us with a picture of a single Will holding and pulling the threads by which crowds of poorer and feebler natures are controlled,—and in all these well known articles of the Carlylian faith, you see the same stamp, a vehement repulsion for all closely regulated and neatly channelled rules and conventions of thought and action which carve out duty for all time, a strong passion of belief in vague mysterious streams of divine agency flowing into the soul and demanding ever new expression, and a perfect idolatry for all nature capable of serving as fuel for such vague, half wasted streams of influence, and of so concentrating them as to create a new and of so concentrating them as to create a new order. Mr. Carlyle can scarcely suppress his contempt for natures content with the monotony of an antique régime. All men, he secretly thinks, are bound either to be the dictators of a new crisis or to serve such dictators when found. Hence the curious blending of his admiration for so much of chaos and anarchic force as serves to blur, as it were, the dull boundary lines of regulated formalism, and give the full impression of the difficulty of new organization, with his admiration for the rough volition which can bridle these forces and press them into the service of a new order. Ordered force drawing its supplies from errant and vagrant force. Dantonesque audacity, Mirabeauesque intellect, Cromwellian enthusiasm and faith, all these satisfy the conditions of his admiration, because you see in more or less prominence, in all of them, the "ragged runs of thunder brooding low," as well as the gleams of that intelligence which can turn the "brute mischief" to purposes of good. We doubt if Mr. Carlyle ever made a hero yet of a character without strong traces in it of jarring forces and half-tamed passions. It is the stormy ebullition of Goethe's youth that helps him to admire the placid tranquillity of his age. Mr. Carlyle does not worship even God as the creator, so much as the subduer of the world, as Him who can tame the wild forests of the Nature and the Man He has first created. Hence a certain lurking sympathy in him with the ferocities and passions to be subdued, which turns into dislike only so soon as they get the final mastery over the will and reason that should be their masters.

Mr. Carlyle has almost no sympathy with that feeling for holiness as holiness, that horror of sin, as sin which feels a certain infinite and mysterious anguish for the voluntary breaking of divine law. And hence the surprise which is involuntarily felt at his lament over the waning power of Oxford orthodoxies. We doubt if any two men, each in their way profound reverers of Authority, were ever less able to understand one another than Mr. Carlyle and the book of the Christian Year, who may stand as well as any one for the "ancient ways" of Oxford Thought. Keble loved authority as a woman loves the firm will on which she can lean, and in which she is ever glad to discern new beauties. He found a real joy for instance, in believing that the Church had pointed out to him a particular line of sentiment in which it was especially proper to indulge on the twenty-third Sunday after Trinity, and adapted all his musings on nature as a wife might adapt her musings on the birthday of an absent husband, to the particular line of thought suggested by the anniversary. The High-Church school, so far as it is poetical at all, is full of this poetry of deep, limited, dependent sentiment, and so far as it is not poetical, is full of mere rigid, punctual obedience to written law. Its sense of sin even is apt to be cast more in the mould of the child's awe of disobedience, than in that of the old evangelical passion of horror at iniquity. It is not easy to imagine anything more widely severed from Mr. Carlyle's religion than this. And yet it was eminently characteristic in him to resent its decay. He does so evidently out of his deep hatred for undisciplined egotisms such as are apt to spring up in ordinary persons if there are no shepherds of the people, even of a thin High-Church type of eagerness, to lead them by the right way. Anarchy on a grand scale, anarchy like that of the French Revolution, anarchy just going to be subdued, he admires, and loves even to revel in. But an anarchy of petty individualities, with "only the constable" to keep them in order, he despises and abhors.

On the whole, Mr. Carlyle's religion, free, masculine, noble in its type, scarcely sums ends in being a faith. He bows to "the eternal verities" with what Professor Huxley calls "a worship chiefly of the silent sort, at the altar of the Unknown and Unknowable," but he scarcely trusts those vague disembodied springs of new vitality and order which he is always groping after, and the impulses of which he is only too eager to obey. His is an inchoate faith, a vague faith, of the young kept fresh until old age. But,

"Hardly his voice at the bier
Gives us a sense of his awe,
The vastness, the grandeur, the gloom,
Of the unlit gulf of himself."

He is happy to inform them that he has also in operation a refreshing and invigorating Shower Bath, which one has but to try to appreciate, especially during the summer months. Everything that luxury and comfort can desire is to be found in his new establishment.
